About John Bascom

One of the University of Wisconsin's presidents in its early, formative years, John Bascom was recruited from Williams College in 1847 to take leadership of UW Madison. He favored a traditional liberal arts curriculum and immediately set out to improve the course, faculty and quality of the students attending the UW.

Bascom favored co-education and arranged for women to have equal access to academic studies. His liberal beliefs associated him with women's suffrage, the right of labor to organize, and prohibition. Professor Bascom served as UW President until 1887.
